The Inns of Court

The music on this recording accompanied dances performed at the Inns of Court in London between 1570 and 1675. The Inns were buildings where English trial lawyers lived, studied and taught law, and held court. In the Elizabethan period, almost a thousand gentlemen had gathered there; primarily sons of the landed gentry of England, mostly between 17 and 30 years of age. In addition to studying law, they also studied many other skills thought necessary to gentlemen of quality, “singing, and all kinds of music, dancing and other such other accomplishments and diversions... as are usually practised at court”.

Each winter, from All Saints Day through Candlemas, Revels were held at the Inn. They included feasting, dancing, masques, and gambling games. Some personal records survive from this period which document these Revels. Six of the surviving manuscripts include choreographies of dances. Step descriptions for all of the dances on this recording appear in manuscripts dated as early as 1570 (with the exception of Black Alman which first appears around 1600.) These manuscripts only contain music for a few of these dances (those from RCM 1119); all other music is from contemporary sources from throughout England and Europe.
